WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT,
Of Ohio.

SAVING AT THE SPIGOT.

Just as the work done by the Departments of State, Agriculture and Commerce and Labor for the fostering and advancement of the foreign trade of this country is beginning to bear fruit, the House of Representatives decides to destroy the machinery by which results have been attained by cutting the names of the officials so engaged off the Federal payroll. After an orgy of extravagance culminating in the pension bill a "morning after" revulsion has come over the House and the axe is falling in a blind effort to make a showing of economy for vote-catching purposes.

Secretary Knox is primarily responsible for most of the good work that has been done in foreign fields, and is entitled to credit for it. Congress cannot say that he has not produced results. Our exports of domestic merchandise have passed the two billion dollar mark in both the fiscal and the calendar year and the boom is still on in spite of somewhat unfavorable conditions in the domestic field. Moreover, the chief gains have been scored in exports of manufactured goods from which labor derives the chief benefit.

Representatives from southern states should bear in mind that much of the work done by the Department of State in foreign countries in the past three years has been in special interests of their constituents. Commercial agents have been opening up new markets for cottonseed oil in Europe with highly satisfactory results in spite of the ill-timed greed which for a time put the price on a prohibitive basis a year ago. The potash controversy was waged almost entirely in the interest of the South which consumes three-fourths of the imports in the shape of fertilizer for cotton and tobacco. The Department of Agriculture also paid much attention to stimulating the domestic demand for cottonseed products, and Dr. Wiley lectured on the virtues of the oil throughout the length and breadth of the land.

Secretary Nagel has just succeeded in organizing the national board of trade advocated by President Taft. This body of representatives of the trade interests of the country is designed to make more effective the work of the government's foreign representatives. If Congress destroys the machinery of our foreign relations all this work will be wasted. As the farmers have hitherto reaped most of the benefits of this work they will be the ones to suffer most through its discontinuance.

One very important matter is still unsettled. Germany is showing a disposition to let down the bars that she raised against the importation of American provisions, and this field should be cultivated carefully, for it means much to the hog-raising branch of farming which is the most profitable part of American agriculture.

The exasperating thing about this proposal to cut off appropriations for the advancement of our foreign trade is that the saving will be hardly worth mentioning. Congress has made adequate appropriations for this work, and should double the money now spent. It is the only money the government spends that produces direct results in actual dollars and cents. Anyone can put his finger on the exact returns in cash by looking at the monthly trade reports, and in many cases he can tell just who or what class of people sold the goods and got the money.

China is just opening up in a modern way and will spend a quarter of a billion dollars through its treasury. With this will come one of the greatest trade booms the world has ever seen. This country could spend a million dollars a year in sending experts into that country to secure for us a share of the business that will be transacted with their hundred million people.

What is the use of the Panama canal if we are not to get our share of the trade that will go through it. It is not going to pay a revenue sufficient to meet interest and operating expenses, but it might easily return to this country an annual addition to our sales of merchandise equal to the total sum expended on it if we strike while the iron is hot.

Has it come to this that the House of Representatives is so parochial in its ideas that it will not spend money unless each member secures a share of it for his own constituents; and that nothing can be done for the country as a whole? Is Congress to give itself over to peanut politics when great interests are at stake? Are its members to carry on the affairs of this great country on a basis of "you scratch my back and I'll scratch yours?" Can a representative who voted to add seventy million dollars to the pension roll and to build a quarter of a million dollar post-office in a village justify this miserable penuriousness when the interests of the whole country are at stake?

PLAYERS NEED PROTECTION, TOO.

Not since the proposition was made to recall the umpire has the great American game been confronted by such a menace as now looms up in the strike of the Detroit Tigers. For the time being the little disturbance in Mexico and that peaceful affair between Italy and Turkey has been forgotten entirely. The rules in the matter are inexorable. Tyrus Cobb, of the Detroit Tigers, committed the unpardonable offense of vaulting a fence and administering a severe drubbing to a spectator who had been calling him vile names. He was suspended—as the rules demanded—but his teammates decided that the assault was justifiable and had refused to play until he was reinstated. It was insurgency, but it has some justification.

After all, why should a baseball player be compelled to submit to abuse that is entirely uncalled for? Even if an actor is uncommonly bad neither the audience nor the management of the theater in which he performs would permit his being openly insulted. If such a thing occurred the person offering the gratuitous insult would be ejected from the house and probably turned over to the police.

Of course, there is a decided difference between a baseball game and a theatrical performance. The former is decidedly more exhilarating and liable to produce hysterical enthusiasm. But there is no reason why that enthusiasm cannot find a vent without forcing one or more of the players to stand abuse that the author would not dare to apply to him, if he felt that he was not amply protected from the consequences of his ill-nature.

Sympathy for Cobb and the striking Tigers seems to be universal. Even members of the United States Senate have written letters expressing approval of Cobb's action and the action of the team in backing him. So much interest is displayed concerning the matter in legislative circles that there is some chance of a federal investigation committee. The Senate is particularly partial to the game, the vice president himself managing to have at least four grandmothers die on his hands when the season is at its height.

Seriously this incident would tend to show that some of the criticisms leveled at the conduct of the great American game are well founded. It could be played without this systematic black-guarding of players and the intense misguided partisanship that makes it appear to be a riot of bleachers to the stranger who views it for the first time. The baseball managers have made ample provisions for the protection of the spectators from the players. In so doing they seem to have gone to one extreme. There ought to be some way to protect the players from hoodlum spectators.—San Francisco Post.

WHY SHOULD LAWYERS CHOOSE JUDGES?

Why should the San Francisco Bar association assume the function of selecting judges to be elected by the people? If the citizens of San Francisco were convinced that the Bar association and its members were entirely disinterested in the matter, their advice might be regarded as weighty and influential and would take it under advisement. But the fact is and experience has demonstrated that lawyers in their relations with judges are not disinterested.

Without mentioning names, it is sufficient to recall the fact that some of the most corrupt judges that have ever sat on the local bench were endorsed by an imposing array of "legal talent." It is a notorious fact that the "ownership" of a judge is a most valuable asset for a man practicing at the bar. We are not now discussing the claims of any of the men mentioned or endorsed for places on the superior bench, but we do assert that lawyers as a class, are the most unsafe guides in this regard, because their business interest lies in making themselves "solid" with the men who decide cases.

We do not say that any motive of the sort has entered into consideration of the present recommendations made by the association, but it seems clear that from considerations of delicacy, if for no other reason, they should keep out.—San Francisco Call.

Eighteen-cent copper is the prediction which is being made upon present conditions and the general rule of cycles in the price of the metal. It is asserted that prices move in an eight-year cycle, four to six years of low prices and two to four years of high prices, with an average in the high period of about five cents above the low price period. Another assertion is that the present rise in price of the metal, whether or not it really reaches the 18-cent mark, will be permanent, for the reason that consumption is overtaking production; the demand thus being equal to or greater than the supply, causing a natural rise and a firm holding of prices. Copper producers certainly can have no objections if the price is maintained at this level.

According to report, Nat Goodwin is contemplating a fifth matrimonial adventure. Rumors of this sort, in spite of their frequency in the intervals between the periods during which the genial comedian has been a married man, always command a certain amount of "space" in the press because the public never grows tired of Nat Goodwin's marriages. Each one has been interesting in its own way, new and striking features being presented in every one.
